

Photos of Malheur River Trail — North Section
Malheur National Forest

June 24, 2011

The meadow at Malheur Ford, with parking area on left, looking upstream.

Checking the trailhead board for the latest USFS bulletin.

The trail follows the west bank of the Malheur River downstream.

Within the first mile, old growth ponderosa pine groves appear.

The river is one long whitewater riffle throughout its course, with few large pools.

After two miles, the trail ascends to a rock outcrop, providing a good view down the canyon.

The trail then descends back to the river again, into streamside larch and ponderosa forests.

The Malheur is a powerful river, whose roar is constantly heard within the canyon.