

The extensive glaciated, alpine topography is what distinguishes the Wallowas from other Oregon ranges.

Once Spring runoff has subsided, day hikers can safely access the East Eagle Creek Trail...

...and enjoy the wildflowers, waterfalls and glaciated hanging valleys along West Eagle Creek Trail.

The High Ridge Trail opens even earlier in the season, with Spring wildflowers and great views.

Good mid-season day hikes are found in the picturesque and accessible Bonny Lakes basin...

...and the hike to Sugarloaf Mountain, where wildflowers persist into mid-summer and views abound.

Later in the season, good Fall color can be found on day hikes to the upper Squaw Creek Basin...

...and along the Summit Ridge Trail, which also features acres of remarkable blue lupine in late July.
