

Photos of Home Creek Hike
Burns BLM District

July 10, 2012

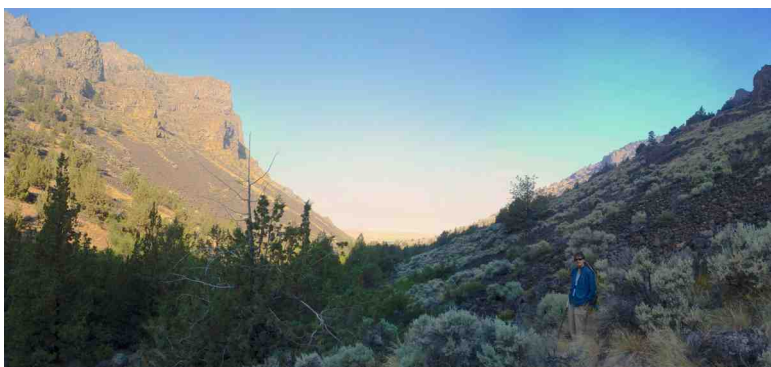

After first obtaining permission from the Ranch, the hike starts up the jeep road behind this green gate.

The road ends at this old homestead site and stone wall. Continue upstream along the old irrigation ditch.

Once in the canyon itself, the only route is cross-country across the rocks above the stream bed.

The hiking is rugged and slow, but the views within the canyon are soon spectacular.

The vertical cliffs and fallen rock fields are a remarkable sight...

...but further up the canyon, the rock fields eventually become too steep and unstable for safe travel.

Once the unstable rocks exceed your comfort level, find a spot along the creek for a rest and snack...

...and enjoy the fantastic rock spires and cliffs overhead. Keep an eye out for bighorn sheep.
